

CASE STUDY

The perfect combination, enthusiasm, knowledge
and patience

The owner of Mulberry Cottage had ambitions to completely transform their Cotswold Stone and timber clad home with high-end design, and finite details which would realise the true potential of the property and result in a stunning blend of contemporary and traditional styling. High-quality ironmongery is now showcased to perfection throughout the entire property.

A PRACTICAL APPROACH

Mulberry Cottage's owner and inspiration behind this project, Tracy Norris-Evans, commissioned construction specialists Barr Build to undertake the building work, and understanding the impact that exquisite ironmongery would have in the final result, appointed Oxford Ironmongery to bring the design ideas to fruition.

This combination of expertise provided an exceptional outcome, with good communication and collaboration ensuring that equal attention was paid to aesthetics and functionality.

Chantelle Coney, Oxford Ironmongery's Architectural Ironmonger, collaborated with Barr Build throughout the project, providing invaluable expertise to ensure that the technical specification and finish of ironmongery across each window, door, and item of bespoke cabinetry was appropriate to its environment. A complete door and window schedule was produced by Chantelle, enabling each of Tracy's design requirements to be sense checked and advice given on security and practicalities throughout.

"Not many people get genuinely excited about ironmongery, but Chantelle does, and the result of this, along with a fully collaborative relationship with the construction company has been outstanding."

TRACY NORRIS-EVANS
MULBERRY HOUSE

Attention to detail, from start to finish has resulted in a truly inspirational home, of exceptional quality.

